JRME* Equity Special Issue

The Journal for Research in Mathematics Education (JRME) is seeking innovative ways to promote and support research that has the potential to encourage and sustain conversations at the intersection between research and practice. As such, the journal plans to pilot special issues of JRME that will address topics of key importance that are considered to be at the boundary of research and practice. The special issue will be accessible to all NCTM members online and become an NCTM publication upon completion.

In line with the NCTM Board of Directors' identification of "equity" as a new strategic priority, the first issue will focus on "Equity in Mathematics Education." The issue is projected to contain 8 to 12 articles, with the first articles to be released online in October 2009.

The publication will seek to generate interest, dialogue, and impact by—

- including up to 12 articles that begin to capture specific equity issues in mathematics education and that welcome a diverse body of contributors;
- staggering publication over a 2-year period to enable a more sustained dialogue; and
- offering online chats or discussions with authors so that all NCTM members can maximize dialogue and opportunity for professional growth.

Information on potential topics of interest and submission guidelines are available at www.nctm.org/jrme/equity.

The Editorial Panel includes Rochelle Gutiérrez (chair), Beatriz D'Ambrosio, Marilyn Frankenstein, Signe Kastberg, Danny Martin, Judit Moschkovich, Edd Taylor, and David Barnes (staff liaison). Once launched, the Editorial Panel looks to extend the reach through online chats or discussions with authors. This practice will provide opportunities for discussions of equity in mathematics education across roles and context and will enable members to have conversations at the intersection of research and practice.

The "Equity" special issue will use a separate open-review process, as opposed to a double-blind review process. The open-review process will allow authors and reviewers to be identified to one another in an effort to use the reviewer-author dialogue to support collegial interaction and the development of richer publications.

Manuscripts should follow JRME submission guidelines and conform to the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association, 5th ed. Submit manuscripts online at www.nctm.org/JRMEsubmit. When selecting Type of Submission, choose "Special Edition: Equity." The deadline for submissions is February 1, 2010.
